The CIOT is excited to be exhibiting its growing range of international tax qualifications at this year's TP Minds International event in London, from 16 to 18 June.

An industry-focused event attracting transfer pricing and corporate tax specialists from across the world, this popular conference will feature a wide range of expert speakers, including thought leaders, policy makers, tax administrators and leading specialist advisers.

Around 500 delegates from across industry and tax practice are expected to attend the main summit on Tuesday 16 and Wednesday 17 June, with a diverse agenda that will take in topics ranging from TP risk and corporate transparency, to the implications for business structuring of the new global trade uncertainty, to the deployment of AI in transfer pricing benchmarking and documentation.

And as the international tax landscape is reshaped in the wake of the OECD's BEPS initiative, with the Pillar Two framework now being implemented in countries around the world, the event organisers have added an additional day to this year's proceedings, with a 'Pillar Two Summit' taking place on Thursday 18 June.

We recently launched the ADIT Pillar Two Award, a spin-off of our globally popular ADIT international tax programme. Designed to guide corporate tax professionals in countries around the world on Pillar Two's key concepts and their practical implementation, the Pillar Two Award is sure to find a receptive audience among the attendees.

Meanwhile the main ADIT programme continues to feature a highly popular Transfer Pricing module, which can be pursued either as part of the full qualification or as a standalone certificate. The module has been successfully completed by over 300 international tax professionals in the last year alone, as TP specialists and international tax generalists alike demonstrate their commitment to best practice in this crucial discipline.

Delegates at TP Minds International will, of course, be discussing the latest implications of emerging technologies in their tax practice, and we will also be exhibiting the Diploma in Tax Technology (DITT). The DITT has been widely supported by corporate tax employers around the world since its launch in 2022, who recognise its value in training tax professionals to identify and apply technological solutions to their organisations' activities and maximise their effectiveness.

Students, members and International Tax Affiliates of the CIOT, including DITT, ADIT and Pillar Two Award students, qualify for a 50% discount on the delegate fee, so make sure to book your place by visiting bit.ly/4tcGH7w (the discount will be automatically applied).

If you're planning to attend this event or if your firm is sending delegates, be sure to visit our exhibition stand to talk about your experience and discover the benefits and skills that continued international tax learning can offer.
